Non-legally binding summary: Please feel free to print this out for use, or to make minor revisions, such as moving applicable commonly used doxologies to the common section. Please also feel free to use any portions in any other work, but in that case it must not be identified as this work (though citation is encouraged). In short, feel free to pass off our work as yours, but please do not pass off your work as ours.

The Psalms are based on the translation of Archimandrite Lazarus Moore, who entrusted a copy of said psalms to his disciple, Heg. Fr. Silas Spear, with full permission to use them, who in turn granted us permission to use them. They are revised based on the (public domain) translation of Heg. Fr. Athanasius Iskander, which he intentionally did not copyright so that they might freely be used. Comparison was also made to many existing translations of the LXX Psalms, without infringing on their copyrights. New Testament passages are based on the (public domain) translation of Heg. Fr. Athanasius Iskander, revised based on comparison with various popular translations, such as the Eastern Orthodox Bible and the King James Version, without infringing on those copyrights.

The Psalmody and Agpeya texts are based on the (public domain) translation of Heg. Fr. Athanasius Iskander, revised to conform to modern English, with comparison to all known English translations of the Psalmody (SUS, LA, and Midwest, without infringing on those copyrights), and by comparison to the original Coptic.

Note, this is a draft for proofing only. In current form, the additional Canticles infringe on OSB's copyright. They can be replaced with pure OSB and cited within gratuitous limits.
